CALL FOR PAPERS

High Temperatures-High Pressures is an international refereed journal that publishes original research papers related to thermophysical properties of matter, including thermal and transport properties. Papers dealing with the gaseous, liquid or solid phase are equally welcome. Special emphasis is put on matter under extreme conditions such as high temperatures and high pressures, on properties of micro- or nano-structured materials, and on non-linear properties related to high rates of energy transport. Both theoretical and experimental work will be considered for publication. Reports on measurements of thermophysical property data as well as on the use of these data for applications form an integral part of the journal's scope. Papers on novel experimental techniques and critical compilations and analyses of existing data may also be submitted.

High Temperatures-High Pressures reflects the common interests of physicists, engineers, material scientists, chemists, and other scientists. It provides a focus for developing and disseminating knowledge of thermophysics research, applications, equipment, and techniques. The journal covers the thermophysical properties of gases, liquids, and solids, at all temperatures and under all physical conditions. Additionally, authoritative reviews of advances in thermophysics research, new technology applications, scientific meeting reports, and book reviews are regular features of the journal.

The editors of High Temperatures-High Pressures invite your contributions. Notes for contributors can be found at the journal website at: <http://www.oldcitypublishing.com/journals/hthp-home/hthp-notes-for-contributors/>
